One prime example of Gatorades success in communicating to customers through the basic communication model is demonstrated through their athletic sponsors. By using athletic figures, Gatorade has been able to reach out to their target market of teenagers for nearly two decades. Dating all the way back to 1991, Gatorade developed a marketing campaign entitled "Be Like Mike." The campaign came out with a lot of hesitation about going towards an individual athletic advertising program.

One could have 30% body fat and the other 10% body fat. Most athletes are healthier than the average person. Even an offensive lineman. I hate the fact that as a 49er fan who has been going to games for about 20 years now, I getting lumped into the same grouping as these idiots. It nice to blame it on the nfl, alcohol, or even stadium security as so many of these posts are pointing out you can These guys were going to fight regardless, whether it be at the game, the bar, or at home. It the individuals that need to be blamed and punished us fans.

That's partly on Dez but also partly on Dak where he hasn't quite figured out t—shirts where to throw him the ball exactly. But yeah, I agree, maybe we should draft a young guy to help out Dez and make some plays. I wasn't opposed to drafting a guy like Mike Williams if he had fallen to us this year, and I think we should be more active in finding a good complement to Dez going forward too..
