His uncommon skillset is visible right away in his ability to corral defensive rebounds and push the ball up the court effortlessly in transition. He is also great on the fast break off the ball, as he understands how to fill lanes correctly and get himself an easy finish at the rim. His impressively long strides also come to play in the half court, where he can catch from the arc and get all the way to the tin in one dribble.

He had his moments, no doubt. There was the 2004 season, when he took the Falcons to the NFC Championship Game at age 24, and his remarkable 2010 campaign with Andy Reid's Eagles when he put up career best passing numbers and inspired all the "Dream Team" talk of 2011. Whenever his playing days officially end, he will leave the NFL with the most rushing yards by a quarterback in the history of the game, more than 1,000 yards ahead of Randall Cunningham in second place.

Decision was made after significant thought, discussion and consideration, the statement read. Evidenced by our decision to deactivate Adrian from yesterday's game, this is clearly a very important issue. On Friday, we felt it was in the best interests of the organization to step back, evaluate the situation, and not rush to judgment given the seriousness of this matter.
