"When Klaus Toppmller was attempting to win the title with Eintracht Frankfurt, he showed the players a replica of the Meisterschale, the big, ugly plate the German champion gets for coming in first," recounts Eberhard Spohd. "This didn't work so he tried with a huge living eagle (the animal in the coat of arms of Eintracht) which he brought into the changing room with the words: 'You must clutch your opposites like the eagle puts his fangs in his prey." Other witnesses report that he said, "Unity (Eintracht in German) gives you wings." The players seemed rather scared and finished fifth and Toppmller was sacked the following April. Sounds like Toppmller would get on well with former Spurs boss Christian Gross, who, when in charge of Grasshoppers Zurich, brought his players to a medieval castle so that they could "envisage a fortress and turn our stadium into one"..
