That's bad news for the Vikes because Keenum, like every other quarterback in the league, sees a significant drop off in his play when he's under pressure. He recorded a 109.5 passer rating when throwing from a clean pocket this season, compared to just 78.5 when pressured. That's like going from being better than Aaron Rodgers to being worse than Matt Cassel..

But what will happen if and when he runs out of legal options to delay a six game suspension? That could happen as early as this week. They need to win five or six of their remaining eight games, in all likelihood. Can they do that if Elliott is suspended for six of them?.
