Even I was told that masturbation was against my religion. I came to learn later on that everyone does it no matter what. My family didn't teach me much about sex either. We barely qualified for the four team state playoff, we faced the heavily favored title game opponent having won our previous four games by an average of just 4.5 points, including a 14 13 victory over our archrival in front of 18,000 people at Busch Stadium. I was a center and linebacker, and one of the team captains. The story of the book, though, is how football and that championship season became a refuge for my classmates and me, young Baby Boomers whose great but nave ambition was tempered by the frightening, threatening social turmoil of the late 1960s.
