Improved considerably from FR to SO season. To his credit has worked hard to expand his game beyond just shooting, becoming a solid pick and role facilitator, even running the point during stretches in his sophomore year. Surprising leaper off of two feet and if he gets an open lane to the basket, uses his excellent length for some exciting two handed finishes at the rim.

Booker started 14 games during the season and was inactive twice on December 25 against the New York Jets due to an ankle injury and on October 15 at the New York Jets due to a chest injury. A projected starter in 2007, it was reported on April 26 that Booker was on the trade bloc.[1]However, Booker remained with the Dolphins as their No. 2 receiver behind Chris Chambers, with the team trying to work rookie first round pick Ted Ginn Jr and Derek Hagan more into the offense. Following a disastrous start to the season for the Dolphins, Chris Chambers was traded on October 16 to the Chargers for their second round draft pick in 2008. Booker then became the only experienced receiver for rookie QB John Beck and career back up Cleo Lemon to throw to for the rest of the season. During the following offseason on February 11, 2008, Booker was one of nine players released by the Dolphins. Chicago Bears (second stint) [edit] On March 4, 2008, Booker agreed to a two year contract with the Chicago Bears worth $3.5 million.

The following week, Jackson rebounded, recording 77 on five catches in a 30 10 victory over the Cleveland Browns.[13] In the playoffs, Jackson recorded just 1 catch for 34 yards in the Eagles' wildcard victory over Minnesota, and four catches for 81 yards in a win over the New York Giants.
