A play calling system informs each player of his task in the current play. There are constraints in designing a play calling system. The 40 second play clock means a team has 30 seconds or less from the end of one play to prepare for the next play. A complicated play calling system that lets a team tailor a play more precisely is harder for players to memorize and communicate.

Garrison Hearst (1998) and Roger Craig (1988) each had six 100 yard games in a season.
