Description: Fantasy football users were austin seferian—jenkins jersey surveyed to brian parker jersey determine both their motivations for playing the game as well as the perceived biological, psychological, and social effects that playing has on them. Previous research supports the notion that fantasy football users may be motivated by factors such as illusion of control (Thompson, Armstrong, Thomas, 1998), monetary investment (Bernhard Eade, 2005), "mavenism" and "schwabism" (Brown, Billings, Ruihley, 2012), and the type of passion they feel towards the activity (Vallerand, 2008). Previous research suggests that these motivational factors may influence how frequently an individual participates in the activity (Kwak, Lim, Lee, Mahan, 2010; Skitch Hodgins, 2005), their physiological arousal and affect while playing (Ladoucer, Sevigny, Blasczynski, O'Connor, Lavoie, 1998; Vallerand, Blanchard, Genevieve, Richard, Catherine, Maude, Marsoleis, 2003) and the quality of interpersonal relationships that an individual has both in the context of fantasy football as well as in their personal life (Philippe, Vallerand, Houlfort, Lavigne, Donohue, 2010).
