2.1 Reflective analysis on the real situation (meaning and relevance) This indicates that social responsibility is directly related to the social contract that exists between the business of sport and the setting or society in which it operates. The social contract refers to those accepted obligations, duties and relationships between organisations or institutions and the people that relate to the corporate impact on the welfare of the society. This makes the social responsibility of sport, as with any business, a significant part of the social contract (Steiner, 1972).
