In the first room, players lie down in turn on a medical table with doctors around the outside. Past injuries are announced, and images are put on the wall for everyone to see. Then the team physicians have a chance to touch, poke, prod and examine each prospect.

In "Diagnosis: Human," Ted Gup argues how most children are introduced to medication at a young age by their parents, sending a message to kids that self medication is acceptable. He describes how instead of overcoming the challenges that are faced with while having a particular condition, many turn to what they have been taught, medication. In certain situations parents are eager to rush their children into taking medication once they see an ounce of imperfection in their child.
