While the Packers would punt on the ensuing drive, it turned out to be a key play in what was eventually a 23 16 Packers win.[4] Since the Bears did get the play overturned (albeit with unintended results), they weren't charged a timeout.[5]The current replay system replaced a previous system used from 1986 through 1991, when a procedure similar to that of college football was used. In 1987 commissioner Pete Rozelle saved the system for another season; in 1988 Pittsburgh Steelers owner Dan Rooney saved it.[6] From before 1986, and from 1992 to 1998, no replay system was used. While there is occasional controversy over the appropriateness of overturned calls, the system is generally accepted as an effective and necessary way to ensure a fair game.

It's crazy, because at any moment, the Chiefs or anybody can turn it around. So that's why you can't let up. We went 0 4, and we've been turning it around, so who's to say the Chiefs or the Raiders can't do the same thing these last four games?".
