Sharpton's foray into the Hill sports issue is the perfect amalgamation of past efforts he's undertaken, though: a black woman under attack, a president with whom he has feuded, a threat to go after advertisers, and an attempt on behalf of the wealthy and powerful to silence athletes who are openly demonstrating to bring attention to police misconduct to communities of color. In 2007, he threatened a boycott of advertisers if radio talk show host Don Imus wasn't fired after he called the Rutgers women's basketball team "nappy headed hoes." He called the Hill suspension "crazy" and said he wanted young people in NAN to think that sports issues are as important as any other issue, even if they're not a matter of life and death. "No, this is not Sandra Bland," he said grimly.
