As much as playing makes one better, it is also much easier to play basketball in practice situations and improve than one would in baseball. Yes, practice and games are different, but you are not telling me that going up against lesser talent in extended minutes makes one better than going up against a seasoned pro in practice. Plus, making a guy play double duty is pretty much unfair.

When individuals gather to achieve a common goal, many interpersonal dynamics play a role in whether or not the team will be successful. Sometimes a team can mesh well together and succeed at anything they attempt; however, other teams, regardless of available resources, seem to flounder in failure. Workplace teams have been studied tremendously in recent years, and there are many reasons found why some teams succeed and others fail.
