Description: This is something of an oddity among fiction stories, because some of its characters may be met in person if you wish. Down at the nearest weed patch or thicket you are quite likely to see a large and unusually perfect spider web with a zig zag silk ribbon woven into its center. Its engineer is the yellow banded garden spider (Epeira Fasciata) whose abdomen may be as big as your thumb.

A runner must maintain possession and control of the ball after a handoff all the way through the play to the ground, and the ground cannot cause a fumble. Therefore, a receiver must maintain possession and control of the ball after a catch all the way through the play to the ground, but the ground can cause an incomplete pass because should the ball touch the ground at any time before the receiver has possession and control, the pass has not been completed. Once the receiver has possession and control, and advances, he is no longer a receiver, as the pass has been completed, but a runner..
