This, nailed it 110%. The Rooneys claim to be a class act, but have their guys playing on a trash pit of a field. These owners whine about players' character flaws, but what does it say about the owners' character to consistently ignore the poor playing surfaces for more than a decade? For every dollar they save in field maintenance costs, they are probably paying $5 in medical care and dead salary costs for the missed time.

San Francisco 49ers: In a departure from the past two weeks when more than 20 players knelt for the national anthem, there were seven 49ers kneeling during the anthem before Sunday game against Washington. Safety Eric Reid, safety Adrian Colbert, linebacker Dekoda Watson, receiver Marquise Goodwin, defensive lineman Arik Armstead, linebacker Eli Harold and cornerback K'Waun Williams knelt. The rest of the team locked arms and stood throughout the playing of the anthem.

Same thing will happen with football. There will be some measure to make it more expensive to do and that cost will get passed on to the consumer. Pretty qick people wont be able to afford to go to games (owners are doing a good job of that themselves, but just wait).

How much of a drop off is there between Wentz and Nick Foles? A lot, as you might suspect. Foles didn't offer much as Wentz's replacement Sunday, going 6 of 10 for 42 yards in the second half against an excellent Rams defense. In his lone start as a member of the Chiefs last season, Foles posted superficially good numbers against the Jaguars, but he averaged fewer than 6 yards per attempt, threw a number of dropped interceptions and posted a Total QBR of just 12.5.

Riley Bullough, LB, BuccaneersThe undrafted linebacker out of Michigan

State has found fame on "Hard Knocks" under the lovable moniker of Joe Dirt.
