A flawed system, which relies on computer rankings, coaches' polls and media voting to determine the best two teams in the nation. Over the years this system has proved ineffective and unfair to the point that even our president, Barack Obama has called for its demise in favor of a playoff system. A playoff system is the only true and accurate way of declaring the outright champion of College Football. The BCS has been in place for 14 years now after being introduced to college football in 1998.
