The team excelled on defense, ranking third in fewest points allowed (255) and second in fewest points allowed per drive.[15] They also ranked second in scoring (427 points), although only tenth in points per offensive drive[15] thanks to a league leading 65 points scored on defensive or special teams plays. The Bears offense was led by quarterback Rex Grossman, the team's first round draft pick in 2003. Over the previous three seasons, Grossman had played in just 8 regular season games due to injuries, but he recovered to start in all 16 games in 2006. By the end of the season, he finished with 3,193 and 23 touchdowns, the most by a Bears guarterback since 1995.

This research focuses on bridging that gap by developing an economic model that adapts to different processes and compares technology by assessing the value each technology adds to the process.
