Fixed circular geometry nozzle is not the best solution. A fixed rectangular geometry nozzle could give a better sealant application in the gap, with less "mountain" if it is not used a variable geometry nozzle. Vision system could be configured to read correctly the gap characteristics: direction, depth and width.

Here is the problem: I want to set up my models to use the playerId value (passed in from an AJAX call on the NFL api) as a PK on my Player class and FK on several other classes/tables. However, you normally can't assign the PK Identity value on a db. I did a lot of searching for a workaround and tried several tricks but none worked.
